Prewriting

- This is the first stage in the writing process. During this stage, you will come up with ideas and/or topics for the particular pieces of writing. This may include any or all of the following prewriting strategies:
  - ✓ Brainstorming
  - ✓ Listing/Bulleting
  - ✓ Asking Questions
    - ✓ Mapping
    - ✓ Free writing
    - ✓ Outlining

When planning your essay...

- Consider three adjectives that describe you.
- List significant experiences you have had.
- Describe a passion and/ or interest.
- What do you value? Who or what has informed your values?
- Define a shining moment.
- Recall when you were forced to take a position.

Drafting

After you decide on an idea, the next stage is drafting the ideas. During this stage, write everything you know about your topic. Focus on getting all of your ideas on the page.

This is not the time to worry about the final product (grammar, word choice, etc). At this point, just say what you want to say in whatever manner you choose. You should, however, pay some attention to the following:

- A thesis statement
- Topic sentences
- Organization
- Supporting details/information

Revising

- During this stage of the writing process, you add, remove, or reorganize information in the draft. This stage often requires the most work.
- You should make an appointment to visit the Writing Center to facilitate a dialogue about your writing and the product.

Consider:

- Have you persuaded the admissions officer that you are a candidate of choice?
- Does the essay demonstrate your “creative” intelligence?
- Will the opening or introduction hold your reader’s attention?
- Have you created a lasting impression?

Also...

- Decide if your essay supports your thesis. This should be the first step in the revision process.
- Look for transitions between paragraphs and/or ideas. Are all of your ideas smoothly connected?
- Determine if you have enough supporting (not irrelevant) information. Do you need to add more “vibrant” detail?
- Think about your word choice. Have you used the most specific words possible?
